From Current Economic Conditions

(LILY, 26, is interviewing for a job at the CIA. She's speaking to what she believes to be a secret video camera.)

LILY

Okay. Hi. I really want this job at the CIA. I'm actually a really great employee. I think I have a sparkling wit and that helps lighten things up in the office and maybe you could use that since you're trying to save the country and topple foreign governments and everything – but please, actually. I would really love to have this job. I would. I've been unemployed for about five months now and I know that's really not all that much but trust me, I am sick of being unemployed, I want to have a job really really bad and I would do such a great job for you guys, I would like surrender my entire life to the job, you'd come to work, and all the research would be done and everything – like, whatever you want, you want coffee, you want me to go to Morocco and get coffee, you want me to go to Morocco and release a super-virus that destroys coffee trees, I would do it, no questions asked, I don't really have any ethics here guys, I would do anything. Seriously. And if you like, wanted me to be a deep undercover spy or something I would do that too, I think I could work out a lot and look really great in a leather suit or something, not that you guys wear leather suits, but whatever the uniform is, I'd wear it. Please. Please hire me.
