Okay, uh... I was six, I guess. And um... I loved Barbies.

I had all the Barbies. I had career Barbie and workout Barbie and regular Barbie and the house and the car and everything. And I used to act out little scenes with them; like all the Barbies lived in one big house together – I didn't have Ken, I hated Ken, but all the Barbies lived in the dream house and they used to have tea together and career Barbie used to make Regular Barbie clean the house and cook dinner and everything. Workout Barbie didn't care, she was always in front of the television and regular Barbie had to do all the work. They were so mean to her. Career Barbie would come home and she'd say, "I'm putting food on the table! I break my back every day, the least you could do would be to have a hot meal ready for me when I get home!" and then regular Barbie would cry and Workout Barbie would just keep working out. She was obsessed. And then I remember... my older brother Jared – he used to have his G.I. Joes come over and pop off the Barbies' heads. So one day I went up to my room and Regular Barbie was gone. And I thought, she's had enough, she's left career Barbie and workout Barbie and has gone off to be a meteorologist. I used to love meteorologists until I discovered they were liars. So career Barbie looked everywhere and she was really sad and she said, "please come back! I'm sorry I was mean to you! I promise to do my share of the housework!" but Regular Barbie didn't come back. And workout Barbie was just doing aerobics like the stupid bimbo she was. So Career Barbie went a little crazy. We looked everywhere together. And then we found her. Jared's G.I. Joes had tied her to a stick in the backyard and were shooting firecrackers at her. They had a little cannon set up and everything. Her whole left side had melted down. Career Barbie cried and cried and we took her down from the stick and set her up in the bed in the dream house and then Career Barbie made the dinner and cleaned the house too. Workout Barbie kept on doing aerobics because she was heartless. But Career Barbie felt really sad. And then the story has a happy ending because Career Barbie learned not to take Regular Barbie for granted and also I took Jared's G.I. Joes and ran them over with the lawnmower.
